

Steve Scarfo

July 17, 2009

Steve Scarfo began the stand-up life back in 1996. He started working the local open mic's around Boston and was noticed by "The Boston Globe" on his very first night. His high energy, real life approach to material coupled with his sometimes bizarre views is sure to strike a cord in any audience and keep them in stitches.

He has been working locally in the Boston since the beginning and has begun to work in different areas of the country. He is a regular at the Comedy Connection in Portland, Me. , Nicks Comedy Stop in Boston and clubs all over the region. Steve has opened for Dave Coulier, Victoria Jackson, Jeff Dunham, Bobby Collins, Lenny Clarke, Bob Marley, and A. Whitney Brown. Steve has also been featured on the A&E real life drama 'Caesars 24 / 7'.

Steve has also been working as an actor / writer for the past several years. He has co-written and starred in several plays, as well as performed in several others. He was also featured in a Mastercard commercial based around the Boston Red Sox, and appears in several movies such as the Farrelly Bros. Movie "Fever Pitch", and "Gone, Baby, Gone" directed by Ben Affleck.
